STRANGERS IN MY CRACKED MIRROR

Kiran K

Guest Lecturer, Haveri University, Haveri, Karnataka, India

Strangers in my cracked mirror Faces many, Familiar none. Some laugh, Some sob, Some stay cold.

Everyone blames me For the stains of blood, But nobody notices The cracked mirror. I bleed too.

In that hollow space Between my ribcage, An ember glows With dying smoke, Holding the last breath Of hope.

The unfamiliar faces In my cracked mirror I hear their fading footsteps, An army of the dead Marching toward Eternal darkness.

A child remains, Unwary of any emotion, With a bag full of masks. Plants and flowers Crumble at his touch A cursed existence, Or existence a curse.

He smiles, A ripple in the ocean Subtle, Yet something moves

Behind that smile. In his eyes, A cemetery reflected, Each grave Bearing the same name.

He shifts in his clothes Uncomfortable, But it's his last pair, Covered in ashes Of what, Or whom, I do not know.

It is supposed to be dawn, But the sun has stalled Halfway And so has His hope.
